Description

A sculptural group depicting two children, cast in iron and partially painted white, made in Italy in the 1950s. Full of character and decorative appeal, the composition captures the innocence, playfulness, and vitality of childhood through a lively and expressive design. The figures are sculpted with great attention to detail, featuring natural poses, expressive features, and finely rendered clothing. The partially painted white finish highlights the sculptural forms and gives the piece a distinctive appearance, evoking classic garden statues, while retaining the durability and sturdiness of cast iron. Created in the tradition of mid-20th-century Italian decorative sculpture, this group combines artistic charm with an architectural presence. Its generous dimensions make it particularly well-suited for a garden,
