Description

Two-piece bookcase, Lombardy second half of the 19th century (circa 1850-1870). The supporting structure (frame) is made of solid oak, with poplar interiors. The front (doors and frames) is covered in fine walnut burl veneer with a mirrored grain, while the outer sides feature vertically grained walnut veneer. The upper section features original blown glass. The piece, without drawers, is designed as a study bookcase or display cabinet. The upper shelves are mounted on a ladder and can be adjusted to different heights. The structure is composed of two stackable parts that can be separated for easier transport. Restored and polished with shellac, there are antique locks that work with a key. Total height: 220 cm Maximum width (at the top frame): 133 cm Base depth: 54 cm Lower body height (base): 79 cm Usable
