Description

This mesmerizing snowy landscape, executed in oil on canvas in 1920 by the renowned Hungarian painter József Eölvédi Gachal (1889-1974), represents a magnificent example of European Impressionist painting created en plein air. The canvas captures a pacifying winter landscape of the snow-covered outskirts of a small town. In the foreground stand the graceful silhouettes of bare trees, their skyward-reaching trunks establishing the rhythmic verticality of the composition. Through this natural veil, the viewer is presented with a sight of cozy small houses with snow-covered roofs and a church bell tower or town hall rising in the distance. The artist masterfully conveys the enchanting atmosphere of the fleeting moment at the end of a cloudy day. Working from nature, Gachal uses a muted color palette and a free, expressive impasto brushstroke, which makes it possible to achieve the complete illusion of the ringing vibration of frosty air. Such a technique perfectly communicates the light, transparent haze and emphasizes the volume of the entire scene, plunging the viewer into an atmosphere of peace and the silence of winter nature. This landscape will become a truly valuable acquisition for any interior and for connoisseurs of European impressionism of the early 20th century.
