Description

Pair of VIEUX PARIS porcelain vases, with polychrome and gilded enamel decoration. This pair of generously sized vases depicts two themes with accompanying motifs: 1. A relief allegory of putti depicting a hunt, with a lying stag; 2. a relief allegory of putti depicting fishing with a catch of fish. The back of this pair of vases features a gilded decoration. A pair of vases in the style of Jacob PETIT. French work, circa 1840. About the history of the porcelain maker: Jacob Petit (1796-1868), also known as Jacob Mardochée, was a renowned 19th-century French porcelain maker whose career began as a porcelain painter. After establishing a solid reputation in the field, he founded his own porcelain manufactory in Fontainebleau around 1830. His artistic style, influenced by the Rococo, is characterized by whimsical forms, vibrant colors, and elaborated decorations. Throughout his career, he created a wide variety of pieces, including vases, statuettes, clocks, and toiletries. Despite some criticism regarding the exuberance of his works, Jacob Petit enjoyed great success among the 19th-century bourgeoisie, who sought refinement and luxury. Today, his artistic contribution and his craftsmanship are recognized and appreciated by collectors and art lovers in the market.
