Description

Carved and polychrome wood. The figures depict St. Notburga with her characteristic attributes--a sickle, a lantern, and a bunch of keys--as well as St. Isidore with his rake and hat. The two sculptures were originally designed as a pair and are among the rarest depictions of the patron saints of agriculture. The original polychrome paint is largely preserved and shows signs of wear consistent with its age. A rare pair of folk devotional sculptures, likely originating from Tyrol. St. Notburga: Patron saint of domestic servants, maids, and agricultural labor. St. Isidore the Farmer: Patron saint of farmers and agricultural workers.
