Description

An impressive and striking dressing table with a finely cast cast-iron mirror, likely of French manufacture, created during the Napoleonic III period in the second half of the 19th century.The piece stands out for its extraordinary decorative richness: rocaille volutes, plant motifs, openwork, and refined reliefs adorn the entire structure, a testament to the high quality of French decorative castings of the era. At the top stands an eagle with outstretched wings, lending the piece great elegance and a striking presence.The contoured top is decorated with elaborate floral and ornamental motifs in relief, while the central mirror, with its distinctive mixed-line shape, is set within a rich openwork frame that makes the piece particularly refined and decorative.A piece with strong aesthetic impact, ideal for collectors,
