Description

A rare and charming pair of decorative wooden boxes arranged to resemble a row of antique book replicas. Each box realistically replicates the bindings of great classics of English literature, such as Robert Louis Stevenson's Treasure Island, Charles Dickens' A Tale of Two Cities, and Ernest Hemingway's The Old Man and the Sea. These hinged boxes feature a richly decorated front that mimics the spines of polychrome hardcover books. They are fitted with patinated metal clasps and handles, allowing for easy transport while enhancing their decorative appeal. Inside, the compartments provide practical storage space for bottles, liqueurs, documents, souvenirs, or small precious items. They can also be used as decorative pieces in a library, office, living room, or cabinet of curiosities. A typical
