Description

A stunning Cuval from Gaziantep in Anatolia. Cuvals are large carrying bags used by nomadic peoples to store grain and transport it during their migrations. Each of these items bears the distinctive marks of its owners, which are directly linked to their geographic origin. Woven with wool over wool. The weaving is as exquisite as the aesthetic appeal. Given the intended use of such items, these pieces are sturdy. Composed exclusively of plant-based dyes in perfect harmony, enhanced by the use of cotton (white patterns) that brings out the contrasts. Belonging to the broad family of everyday objects, Cuval are among the most precious and refined textiles. This one is unique in that it features very light shades at each end, accented by a wide band of deep indigo blue. Early 20th century Dimensions: 130 x
