Description

A superb rug; pieces of this size are extremely rare. This is one side of a Khorjin or Torba--in other words, a fragment, the side of a huge bag. Attributed to the Ersari Turkmen nomads based on the stylized border motifs, the piece is woven and knotted using wool-on-wool technique. At first glance, one is immediately captivated by the great depth of the exclusively plant-based dyes, which are dense and saturated. The magnificent indigo blue that stands out against a solid madder-red field is simply stunning. It is precisely these hues that allow us to date the piece to the very early 20th century, circa 1900-1920. The piece has just come out of our restoration workshop; Saïd has completely reworked the borders, and each end is finished with a bar tack. The surface was intact except for a few minor
