Description

A striking vintage bracelet from the 1970s in 750/°° yellow and white gold (18 KT, Charenton hallmark). Its aesthetic is particularly representative of the jewelry design of that decade, featuring a series of wide links with softened contours--known as the "television" shape--whose rounded geometric lines evoke the iconic modernist creations of the 1970s. The main yellow gold links are connected by series of three separate white gold rings. Their parallel arrangement creates an elegant two-tone contrast and produces a striking fluted visual effect, adding depth, rhythm, and sophistication to the overall design. This interplay of volumes accentuates the presence of the links while visually lightening the bracelet's structure. The slightly curved design of the links allows the bracelet to naturally conform to the shape of the wrist, offering a perfect drape and a particularly comfortable fit despite its bold presence. The ratchet clasp is fully integrated into the bracelet's design and becomes invisible once worn. It is complemented by a safety clasp that ensures complete security during use. With its graphic design, generous proportions, and elegant combination of yellow and white gold, this bracelet is a beautiful example of 1970s French jewelry, whose style remains remarkably modern to this day.
