Description

A functional work of art for your living room The "Brutalist"-style table is not just a piece of furniture, but a true statement of character. This distinctive style emerged after World War II, specifically in the 1950s in England. During that historical period, at the end of the war when materials were scarce, designers had to reinvent the concept of aesthetics. As a result, the forms and materials were meant to express the raw nature of their imperfections, creating an unparalleled visual impact. The term "Brutalist" derives from the French "beton brut," which literally means "raw concrete." Choosing this piece means bringing a fragment of design history into your home, characterized by timeless charm. Superior Quality and Unique Details This extraordinary indoor coffee table features a twisted iron frame and a sumptuous double oval marble top. With its dimensions of h.80 59x50 and its 1950s Italian origin, it represents a sound investment for the long term. For this reason, the quality of the selected materials ensures exceptional sturdiness, even as the design maintains an incredibly sophisticated aesthetic. Furthermore, the combination of the strength of iron and the elegance of marble creates a captivating contrast. Undoubtedly, such an exclusive vintage piece draws attention in any room, enhancing the entire surrounding decor.
