Description

Very large Louis XV-style trumeau, made of gilded wood and lacquered in pale green and cream, decorated with numerous rocaille motifs, such as scrolls, foliage, shells, and patterns. It features two mirrors placed one above the other, set within a gilded wood frame. Intended to adorn the reception rooms of grand residences in the 19th century, placed atop a mantelpiece or console table, this large trumeau helped diffuse light and make the space appear larger, while serving as a major element of the interior decor. It will easily find its place in a classic or contemporary interior. Trumeau mounted on an oak core; some signs of wear; chips in the gilding and wood; 2 holes in the side posts (which were used for the lamp arms); wears to the silvering of the mirror and some previous restorations.
