Description

Large Polished Axe from the Late Neolithic Period (3400-2900 BCE) - Found in Héverlé, Belgium, 1866An important polished axe from the Late Neolithic period (3400-2900 BCE), carved from a beautiful brown flint.Although incomplete, this piece retains remarkable dimensions, with a current length of 19 cm. The heel section is missing, but the object remains particularly representative of the large, prestigious axes produced during the Late Neolithic.This axe comes from an old Belgian collection assembled in the 19th century. Its significance is enhanced by the presence of its original provenance label, which reads: "found in 1866 in the Héverlé woods, near Lou(vain)."
