Description

A pair of African buffalo trophies from Mozambique, dated 1967, each retaining its original brass identification tag. These remarkable trophies are representative of the great African safaris of the mid-20th century and hold considerable decorative, historical, and collectible value. The African buffalo is one of the most respected and iconic animals on the African continent, renowned for its strength, resilience, and imposing presence. Each trophy features the massive horns and powerful features that have made this species one of the most admired members of Africa's legendary "Big Five." Mounted in the traditional safari style, the trophies are highlighted by their original brass identification tags, which provide valuable provenance and historical context. These plaques
