Description

A Greater Kudu trophy from Mozambique, dated 1966, with its original brass identification tag still attached. Widely regarded as one of the most elegant and sought-after species of African antelope, the Greater Kudu is famous for its majestic spiral horns and noble bearing, making it one of the most iconic trophies of classic African safaris. The trophy features the long, twisted horns characteristic of the kudu, its harmoniously proportioned head, and its delicate features. The elegant spiral horns are among the most admired in the animal kingdom and contribute to the piece's exceptional visual impact. Mounted in the traditional safari style, the trophy is accompanied by its original brass identification tag, attesting to its provenance and enhancing its historical value. These plaques are highly prized by collectors, as
