Description

This Louis-Philippe-era walnut office chair captivates with the refined balance of its lines and the warmth of its wood. The frame features a continuous arched backrest that extends into curved armrests, which envelop the seat with a discreet elegance typical of the comfort sought after in bourgeois interiors of the mid-19th century. The seat is caned, offering visual lightness, breathability, and authenticity, while the turned and fluted front legs attest to meticulous craftsmanship--understated yet masterful--characteristic of the Louis-Philippe style. The slightly angled, sabre-shaped rear legs ensure perfect stability while lightening the chair's silhouette. The piece as a whole exudes a sense of serene solidity, elegant functionality, and timeless charm. This armchair is a piece with
