chandelier is crowned by a cascading structure formed of cylindrical elements in clear glass or crystal, culminating at the center with a spherical crystal ball that serves as the perfect focal point. Several light fixtures (lamp holders) are housed within the structure. When the bulbs are lit, the light passes through the various types of crystal (the upper pyramids, the blue teardrops, and the transparent facets), diffusing into the room in a soft, sparkling manner without direct glare. The electrical components have been completely replaced. Made in Italy, circa 1960. It includes a 40 cm gold chain with a rosette.
