Description

A charming antique polychrome porcelain figurine depicting a young marquis wearing a tricorne hat adorned with a purple plume, a yellow sash, and a sword at his belt. The figure strikes a theatrical pose, characteristic of works produced by the Saxon manufactory in the second half of the 19th century. The statuette rests against a tree trunk on a rocaille base richly embellished with gilding, highlighting the finesse of the modeling and the quality of the craftsmanship. The delicate skin tones, vivid colors, and gilding--still clearly visible--attest to the craftsmanship of the Saxon workshops, which drew heavily on 18th-century Rococo models. The reverse of the base bears a monogram painted in underglaze blue, corresponding to a Saxon workshop mark. Saxony (Germany), likely the Volkstedt or Sitzendorf
