Description

A charming little, almost square earthenware inkwell, decorated with flowering branches on each side. Made in the second half of the 18th century, it comes complete with its pewter inkwell. Inside, I found the invoice from the antique dealer who sold it in 1995; he attributes it to Grenoble. It is true that near this city, in La Tronche, there was a very active production center whose decorative styles are similar. Any additional information is, of course, welcome. A few small chips, but overall it is in very good condition.
