Description

Oil on canvas from the Venetian school of the first half of the 18th century. The landscape resembles the pictorial style of Bartolomeo Pedon, one of the most renowned Venetian landscape painters of the Baroque period. The scene, rich in vegetation, frames a clearing in the woods near a stream that joins a river. Shepherds, male and female, rest and eat while their flock grazes nearby. In the background, a valley extends with scattered buildings and mountain peaks fading into a blue sky. The details of the vegetation and buildings are accurate and well-rendered. The painting is presented in a contemporary wooden frame, regilded in the early 1900s. Product Condition: The item is in good condition, with minor signs of wear. We try to present the item's actual condition as accurately
