Description

This traditional bowl, designed for serving miso soup, is made of Japanese urushi lacquer in a deep, particularly glossy black. The lid is adorned with a delicate asymmetrical design created using the maki-e technique (gold powder applied to fresh lacquer). The motif depicts a stylized seascape. It features traditional sailboats sailing near pine trees (matsu), a symbol of longevity in Japanese art. The design stands out against a pattern of fine horizontal gold lines evoking a body of water or mist. The interior of the bowl and the underside of the lid feature a smooth, unadorned black lacquered surface, highlighting the quality of the material. The object is distinguished by its extreme lightness, a characteristic of a finely hand-turned wooden core, typical of high-quality lacquerware from
