Description

France, circa 1950: "Rooster Chandelier," wrought iron, 52 × 42 (at the crown) × 50 cm (at the candle holders). No hook cover or chain; some lamp holders need straightening. Apart from pieces reserved for an elite by interior designers, popular furniture until then had been limited to copies of antique pieces. The postwar period saw the emergence of numerous designers who advocated for functional and modern furniture. Our chandelier, whose wrought-iron craftsmanship is a delight to behold, is an excellent example of this, being both stylized and functional.
