Description

Oil on canvas depicting the Sibyl, a near-contemporary copy of Angelica Kauffmann's painting, dated between 1780 and 1785 and housed in the Galleria Sabauda in Turin. This work, dated to the late 18th century based on analysis of the crack and canvas, demonstrates a close connection between the artist and Kauffmann herself, likely indicating a pupil. The typically neoclassical scene presents the Sibyl as a Roman matron, intent on reading a voluminous tome. The masterful interplay of light and shadow allows the figure to emerge from the dark, nuanced background, highlighting her complexion and form. The painting, already restored, shows some stains on the book's pages. It is presented in a 19th-century frame. Product Condition: The item is in good condition, with
