Description

Anthropomorphic statuette of a protective guardian--Himalayas, Nepal, mid-20th century or earlier. These statuettes were typically placed along roads and paths in Nepal and are often believed to represent guardians or protective spirits. They are typically found in front of bridges, near springs, or by houses. However, this one was not intended for outdoor display. It is smaller in size and was placed inside the home, as indicated by its dark patina caused by smoke from the hearth. It is depicted standing with its hands clasped in a gesture of devotion. Height: 33 cm Weight: 278 g
