Description

A charming angel's head carved from beautiful white Carrara marble, an 18th-century Italian work. This delicate sculpture depicts a cherub with a round, youthful face, full cheeks, and a gentle gaze. The features are rendered with great sensitivity, while the small wings enveloping the base of the head lend the piece a sense of lightness and evoke Italian Baroque works intended to decorate religious buildings or aristocratic residences. Angel and putto heads are a recurring motif in 17th- and 18th-century Italian sculpture, particularly prized for their decorative and spiritual qualities. The marble features a beautiful antique patina, with a delicate polish on the face contrasting with a more matte finish on the wings, highlighting the sculptor's craftsmanship. The sculpture rests on a blackened
