Description

An elegant bronze sculpture with a nuanced green and brown patina depicting a male torso inspired by ancient statuary, created by sculptor Pierre Chenet. In this creation, the artist pays a vibrant tribute to the great fragments of Greco-Roman sculpture. Devoid of its head, arms, and part of the right leg, this torso evokes the archaeological remains that have fascinated collectors since the Renaissance and the Grand Tour. The modeling is particularly expressive: the powerful musculature is rendered with great sensitivity, alternating between polished surfaces and deliberately rougher textures that reinforce the impression of antiquity. The proportions are remarkably balanced, and the slight twist of the pelvis lends movement and elegance to this composition. The bronze rests on an architecturally designed base
