Description

Instantly recognizable by the perfume jar--also known as a nard vase--that she used to anoint Christ's feet during the meal at the home of Simon the Pharisee (Gospel of Luke 7:36-50), Mary Magdalene is depicted, as is customary, with her hair loose. Her upturned gaze, meditative expression, and the drapery slipping off her shoulder convey the moment of conversion and repentance--a major theme in 17th- and 18th-century religious painting. The gentle face recalling the grace of Raphael's models, the delicacy of the hands, and the refined rendering of the skin tones all combine to create a fine devotional painting of high quality, where the subject matter is matched by a timeless artistic execution. This oil-on-canvas work is in very good condition. Worldwide delivery
