Description

As the second half of the 19th century embraced the grand history of France, both mythical and historical figures vied for the public's fascination. "Neo" styles were enjoying their golden age, and the medieval era held a particular allure. All of this fired the imaginations of artists--such as François Auguste Hippolyte Peyrol, who here presents a striking, idealized portrait of a Viking chieftain. This impressive bronze sculpture bears the signature "H. Peyrol" on the base.
