Description

A rare and elegant decorative Japanese dish from the Meiji period, crafted from finely worked pewter, with a bronze decoration in high relief, enhanced with gilding on the back. The central medallion depicts a samurai on horseback, galloping across a battlefield, clad in his traditional armor and brandishing his sword. The relief, featuring high-quality chiseling, stands out against a gilded background that highlights the vigor of the scene. The wing, with scalloped edges, is adorned with a series of panels finely engraved with floral and geometric motifs inspired by the Japanese decorative tradition, creating a refined contrast between the patinated surfaces and the gilded sections. The reverse features a design in slight relief depicting a horseman, created using the repoussé technique,
