Listed master's hallmark--though here incompletely struck and worn--of Philibert LESPINETTE, who became a master around 1680: a crowned hammer / (P).(L).N. silversmith was active in both of these centers, and the illegible hallmark therefore does not allow us to determine which one produced this wine server. Cimarres were produced primarily in Champagne; however, we have found a few examples in Île-de-France and Franche-Comté. They were used for serving wine at the table when one wished to show special honor to one's guests. The one presented here was cast using the longitudinal casting technique, which was in use until around the 1700s. Indeed, on the inside, one can see the two vertical welds where the two symmetrical halves were separated from the mold--which consisted of two shells--as well as the small plug at the bottom that seals the hole left by the central axis of the casting. Then, at the very beginning of the 18th century, master craftsmen abandoned this technique and adopted the radial casting
