Description

Rare Korean vase, made of white porcelain, wheel-thrown. It has an elegant, typically Korean neck bearing traces of the wheel-throwing process. The base is almost entirely covered with grains of kiln sand, fused in place by firing. There are many known examples of this model, but none possess its perfect proportions--height, width, curves, flaring--everything is in harmony and of rare elegance. Furthermore, the potter thinned the walls of this vase to the very limit of the clay's capabilities in order to give his work the lightness that its aesthetic demanded."Never leave any unnecessary material." (B. Leach) Korean work by a master potter from the late Joseon Dynasty, Gwangju Royal Kiln, 19th century or earlier? Height: 27 cm. No restoration. Good condition, shows normal wear.
