Description

The colors of this Shasaven kilim from Persia are stunning. They provide a valuable clue that helps us date the piece: the colors and the weave. The weave is extremely tight and fine. The piece is supple and surprisingly light. These two characteristics combined allow us to date the production of this kilim to the very late 19th century. At first glance, one is instantly captivated by the purity of the plant-based dyes, their softness, and their luminosity. Deep, rich indigo blue, turquoise, pale pink, dark brown, and ecru. The whole is in perfect harmony. This is a fragment. Originally, the piece must have been around 3 meters long. Due to its age and wear in one section, the piece was trimmed to preserve the intact portion and create a compact, nearly square format. Star-shaped motifs and the "eye
