Description

This is a neo-Gothic-style lantern, probably from the late 19th century. Structure and Materials Shape: Hexagonal, with a slender silhouette reminiscent of a cathedral spire. Frame: Made of patinated gilded metal, likely bronze or brass. It is intricately crafted with pointed arches, small columns, rosettes, and quatrefoils typical of Gothic architecture. Roof: A six-sided pyramidal roof made of blackened metal, openwork with small decorative motifs. It is topped by a wooden ball and a suspension ring. Panels: Six panes of textured/frosted glass that diffuse the light without being completely transparent. Technical details: An electrical cable can be seen coming out the side, so it has been electrified. Style and Ambience The piece as a whole is highly ornamental. The miniature architectural motifs
