decorative metal handles. A removable inner suitcase completes the ensemble and illustrates the practical design of this form of luxury travel luggage. The exterior retains its dark green finish, combined with black reinforcements, patinated brass and metal fittings, visible rivets, hinges, locks and protective corner mounts. The original transport labels, still preserved on the surface, add to the authenticity and historical character of the piece.

Technique and materialsThe trunk is made with a rigid body covered in coated canvas or similar material, reinforced with metal mounts, brass elements, riveted construction and a covered upper handle. The interior is lined with blue-green fabric and fitted with drawers, wardrobe rail, wooden hangers and preserved original accessories.

DatingFirst half of the 20th century. This dating is consistent with the wardrobe-trunk construction, riveted hardware, industrial fittings and surviving travel labels.

ConditionVery good condition for a travel object of this type, retaining its original character and practical arrangement. Wear, rubbing, oxidation, handling marks and original transport labels are visible, all consistent with age and use. The trunk preserves a strong decorative presence and an attractive authentic patina.

Function and displayToday, wardrobe trunks of this kind are highly appreciated in interior decoration. They can be used as a dressing-room feature, decorative storage piece, occasional cabinet, display object, or statement piece in a living room, bedroom, boutique or hotel interior. Its patinated surface, metal fittings and preserved interior arrangement give it both decorative strength and practical interest.
