Description

Here, the artist presents us with a hunting scene of exceptional quality. His brushwork remains supple and precise, drawing on the naturalist tradition of the 19th century. Adam Gourdet places as much importance on the anatomical accuracy of the animals as on depicting their behavior. With its front legs outstretched, its head slightly lowered, and its gaze intensely fixed on its prey, the dog is in a posture characteristic of a pointing dog. The hare is frozen in a state of alert. Standing on its hind legs, its long ears pricked toward the sky, it turns its head toward its pursuer. Its gleaming eye and tense posture convey the animal's full vigilance. The setting is a forest floor bathed in soft light, consisting of abundant vegetation where foliage, wild grasses, and young shrubs intermingle.
