Description

An intense portrait of a young girl painted in oil on cardboard by Alessandro Milesi, one of the leading figures in Venetian painting from the late 19th century through the early decades of the 20th century. The work stands out for its extraordinary immediacy of execution and the quality of its brushwork--broad, free, and textured--with which the artist constructs the face and figure through a skillful balance of light and color. The young woman's gaze--gentle and introspective--lends the painting intense expressive power, while the warm-toned palette, enlivened by delicate hints of pink and blue, lends depth and harmony to the composition as a whole. This painting is a significant example of Milesi's work, which successfully blends the solidity of the compositional structure with the
