Description

Natural Tsavorite and Diamonds This 18-karat yellow gold signet ring combines the boldness of contemporary lines with the timeless elegance of precious stones. Its generously curved band features a magnificent oval tsavorite at its center, whose deep green hue is accentuated by diamonds set on either side of the stone. Elegant without being ostentatious, this ring makes a striking statement while remaining easy to wear every day. Its understated design makes it just as suitable for a man's hand as it is for anyone seeking a unisex piece with a bold character.

Tsavorite The tsavorite is one of the most sought-after gemstones in contemporary jewelry. Discovered in 1967 by British geologist Campbell Bridges during research in Tanzania, it was later found in the region of Tsavo National Park in Kenya, which gave it its name. It was Henry Platt, then president of Tiffany & Co., who officially named this gem "Tsavorite." Belonging to the garnet family, it captivates with its intense green color, exceptional brilliance, and great durability--qualities that make it an excellent stone for jewelry intended to be worn regularly.

Our Take We love this ring for its balance of boldness and understated elegance. The deliberately minimalist gold band draws all attention to the depth of the tsavorite, while the diamonds add a subtle sparkle without ever distracting from the center stone. A piece of jewelry with character, destined to stand the test of time with elegance.
