Description

Important okimono carved from a single block of ivory - Japan, Meiji period (1868-1912) Japan - Meiji period (1868-1912) A superb and significant okimono carved from a single block of ivory, finely carved, depicting an old man carrying two children in a large wicker basket, accompanied by a third child walking beside him. This scene of everyday life is characteristic of high-quality Japanese craftsmanship from the Meiji period. The work demonstrates remarkable mastery of ivory carving: the delicacy of the faces, the richness of the expressions, and the precision of the clothing, ropes, and wickerwork. The details are of the highest quality and reveal the craftsmanship of the finest Japanese workshops of the late 19th century. The slight cracks visible on the surface are natural and
