Description

An exceptional, rare, and monumental large-scale art glass vase from the famous and prestigious Daum Nancy factory circa 1911 under the artistic leadership of Antonin Daum (1864-1930) during the golden era of the Art Nouveau movement. This museum-quality piece stands out for the technical virtuosity of its craftsmanship in multi-layered blown glass. The body features a marbled background and an intermediate layer with beautifully blended shades, ranging from a luminous saffron yellow at the top to deep mauve, violet, and brown hues toward the pedestal base. The rich, naturalistic spiral design is entirely etched in relief. It depicts, with great sensitivity, poplar (álamo) branches and leaves that elegantly envelop the neck and body of the vase. The contrasts between the opacity of the leaves and
