Description

Oil on canvas. The virgin holds her Child, who is lying on a pillow and he's asleep. Mary looks at the viewer, almost as if showing off her Son, with a serious expression, aware of his destiny, of which the child, however, seems completely unaware, still simply a child, not the Son of God. The physiognomic features of the two figures are also distinctive, particularly Mary's rounded, plump face, snub nose, round eyes, and not slender build, which are far removed from more traditional depictions of the Madonna. At the top left are some letters of an inscription that appear to have been cut off. The painting has been restored and relined in the past. It is presented in a period frame. Product Condition: The item is in good condition, with minor signs of wear. We try to present the item's actual condition as accurately
