Description

Oil on canvas depicting a lively scene of marine life, with ordinary people gathering shellfish along a cliff, against the backdrop of a choppy sea dotted with sailboats. The painting is striking for the dynamism of its composition, the naturalness of the figures' gestures, and the luminous rendering of the marine atmosphere, with a skillful balance between the landscape and the figures. The color palette is warm and harmonious, typical of 19th-century genre painting from the Mediterranean region. The work is attributed to Giuliano Bartolomé (1825-1909), a painter known for scenes of daily life, seascapes, and folk subjects. The canvas was originally signed; the signature is no longer visible following a conservative restoration (relining).
