Description

Oil on canvas depicting a flower vendor standing behind a stall in the heart of a city. The foreground features pots, baskets, and bouquets of roses, lilacs, daisies, and other flowers. The vendor is holding a bouquet, while the background reveals a street lined with buildings. The composition places significant emphasis on the flowers and everyday urban life. The work is signed "Julliard" in the lower right corner. The Bénézit mentions Julliard as a 19th-century French school painter of flowers and notes that the Brest Museum held two of his works. Despite the scarcity of biographical information on this artist, this painting illustrates his specialization in flower painting and market scenes.
