Description

A flat-topped Directoire-style desk made of solid mahogany and veneer. A very elegant piece dating from the very early 19th century. It stands on four pyramidal legs with bronze feet. It features four drawers on the front, including one double-height drawer with a drop-down compartment and a storage compartment. This is a center desk, meaning its ornamentation extends across all sides with faux drawers on the back; it can therefore be used as a reception desk. Two pull-out shelves expand the workspace. The writing surface is covered in green leather with a design engraved using a gold-leafing tool. The leather is in good condition, with a few stains and creases. The piece is in good household condition; it is a functional piece that has been in use for many years, so it shows some signs of wear, but
