Description

20th-century oil painting on wooden panel, monogrammed S (19th century - 20th century) lower left, and dated 8-36 for August 1936. A lakeside view featuring a mass of vegetation in the foreground, followed by a lake or waterway extending toward a final band of vegetation in the distance. The brushwork is compact and energetic, executed in broad vertical areas across the darker vegetation, while the water is rendered with wide horizontal strokes that feel both sculptural and emotionally charged. The deliberately restrained palette, dominated by the pale tones of the water and echoed in the sky through a mirror-like effect, creates an almost monochromatic impression. The composition also flirts with abstraction through its forms, the energy of its execution, and the intensity of its technique. Surprisingly modern for its time, the work recalls certain mid-20th-century approaches to landscape painting through both its simplification of forms and its almost abstract treatment of light. The light wood frame provides a gentle contrast to the painting's palette. A timeless view that will sit just as comfortably in a contemporary interior as in a more traditional setting featuring light and understated decorative tones.
