Description

Siberian mask, 19th century. Carved with striking simplicity, it features a face reduced to the essentials: wide eye sockets and a straight mouth carved into wood deeply eroded and weathered by time. This piece, whose raw aesthetic evokes a spirit helper or an entity from the unseen realm, bears witness to the harsh conditions and profound spirituality of Siberian traditions, where the material itself seems to bear the marks of the sacred and the elements. PERIOD: 19th century DIMENSIONS: 30 cm (without base) MATERIAL: wood
