Description

Pair of andirons, "Flamme" model, made of wrought iron with side legs curved in an arc and a rear log rest bar; made in the workshop Raymond SUBES. These andirons "evoke the great French tradition of naturalistic ironwork--Émile Robert, Edgar Brandt, the iron lacework of historic French balconies--while remaining firmly rooted in the modern mid-century aesthetic. Subes's work spanned both the strictly geometric and the richly decorative, and these andirons represent the latter tendency at its most accomplished. The quality of the ironwork--the precision of the twisting, the volutes at the base, the overall sense of technical mastery in the service of expressive form--places this pair among the finest creations of his long workshop career, during which he executed commissions for the
