Description

A large ovoid stoneware vase produced by the Revernay workshops at the Digoin Manufactory during the Art Deco period. Resting on a foot, the vase features a broad, ovoid body topped by a short, truncated conical neck accented by a groove. The entire surface is enlivened by a rich, stylized floral design, punctuated by geometric friezes. The glazes offer a particularly decorative palette blending pinkish beige, brown, green, deep blue, and bluish gray. The large flowers, rendered in a synthetic style, stand out against a dense background where glaze runs and firing variations lend the surface a beautiful depth. The underside bears an engraved mark: "Revernay - 142-B - 59". The numbers correspond to the shape and decoration references used by the factory; the number "59" should therefore not be interpreted
