Description

A pair of large, hand-painted ceramic plates dating from the late 19th century. Each plate is decorated like a true work of art. Signed within the design, they showcase delicate painterly work: the artist applied brushstrokes with finesse, allowing the texture of the ceramic and the various flat areas of paint to show through, giving the pieces a beautiful sense of depth. One depicts a large sailing ship rigged with a lateen sail, while the other evokes a landscape of a pond or body of water at sunset. The rendering of the water, sky, and clouds recalls the sensibility of the Impressionist painters, while the palette of deep browns, nuanced grays, and subtle greens also evokes the atmosphere of the Barbizon School. Thanks to their large size, the quality of their craftsmanship, and the originality of their
