Description

A very beautiful and rare set of six Tecno PS142 armchairs designed by Milanese architect Eugenio Gerli (1923-2013) in 1969. Concealed metal frame covered with foam and upholstered in thick, light red "raspberry" corduroy. This is a modern design typical of the 1960s--both rigid and soft--with a comfortable yet firm seat that provides good back support. In a word, supple. The seat cushions are removable, revealing a cast aluminum frame strung with ten low-pitched piano wires. Each armchair comes with an accessory I've never seen anywhere else: a small, rectangular lumbar cushion covered in the same velvet. The condition is excellent, with no noticeable wear. The rubber ball casters swivel, giving these chairs a playful and free-spirited feel that's typically Italian. 68 x 60 x 67 cm. Delivery
