Description

A decorative group of three Chinese hand-carved stone amulets produced in the traditional fangu style and inspired by the forms of ancient Chinese jade carvings. Originally made as individual ornaments, they have been carefully assembled into a harmonious ensemble reflecting closely related carving quality, colour and symbolism. The group includes a Bi-type disc carved with a Qilin among sacred clouds and Lingzhi mushrooms, an archaic C-shaped Chilong dragon symbolising strength and protection, and a carp in mid-leap representing abundance, perseverance and success. Together they create an attractive display illustrating some of the best-known symbols of Chinese culture. Collector's Note: The following comments represent our preliminary assumptions and a visual assessment conducted via AI (Gemini) analysis. This evaluation should be regarded as a preliminary visual assessment only and not as a laboratory or gemological report. The carvings are offered as vintage Chinese decorative stone carvings, although further examination may show that one or more pieces are earlier or carved from higher-grade jade.¹ The Bi-type disc carries a 70-80% probability of being a vintage or modern carving from the 20th to 21st century, and a 20-30% chance of being an authentic late Qing dynasty antique (19th century). Comparable vintage examples typically trade around £150-£300. Should a future specialist examination confirm the piece as a genuine Qing-period white jade carving, its market value could potentially increase to £1,900-£2,600.² The yellow carp pendant carries a 70-80% probability of being created in the mid-to-late 20th century. Comparable vintage pendants made of yellow stone or treated jade frequently trade on the secondary market for £40-£75. However, should a future specialist examination confirm the piece as an authentic late Qing dynasty carved yellow jade fish, its market value could potentially increase to £1,900-£2,650.³ The Chilong dragon pendant is a classic Chinese motif. The crack to the reverse of the head reduces its value, although signs of age and use may justify further examination. Comparable vintage examples typically trade around £150-£300, while this example, taking the visible crack into account, is preliminarily estimated at around £75-115. The group is offered at £600 as a decorative vintage ensemble. For collectors willing to undertake further specialist analysis, it presents an opportunity to acquire the group at a vintage price. Should one or more carvings receive a stronger attribution, the overall value could be significantly higher than the current asking price. The final decision is yours.
